In this videocast, journalist Nicolas Witchell interviews Information Security Forum Managing Director Steve Durbin. They discuss the cyber risks examined in the ISF’s latest report, Threat Horizon 2022: When Digital and Physical Worlds Collide. Steve shares his insights on the role of cyber in society and its impact on individuals and the future outlook.

If you’ve enjoyed this videocast, please share it in your networks, and check out our weekly ISF Podcast. If there’s someone you’d like us to interview, or a topic you’d like to hear covered, let us know. Get in touch with us on Twitter @securityforum, or join the conversation on our LinkedIn group. And of course visit our website, securityforum.org, where you can download ISF’s research, practical tools and guidance relating to this discussion.

References and Supplemental Materials for Today’s Episode:

Information Security Forum

Nicholas Witchell

Threat Horizon 2022: When Digital and Physical Worlds Collide—NB: This full report is available to members only and can be downloaded from ISF Live

“State-Sponsored Cyberattacks ‘Challenge The Very Concept Of War,’” Forbes, 10 August 2019

Internet of Things

“Smart home gadgets are open to attack: So time for IoT security laws? No, says Europe,” ZDNet, 11 July 2018

Smart city

Security by Design

More on Security by Design from the ISF Podcast

“One year after GDPR, China strengthens personal data regulations, welcoming dedicated law,” TechNode, 19 June 2019

Huawei

“Floods, tornadoes, snow in May: Extreme weather driven by climate change across US,” USA Today, 29 May 2019

“A strange, wavy jet stream is blasting Europe with heat. Scientists say this could be the ‘new normal,’” NBC News, 29 June 2019

General Data Protection Regulation

California Consumer Privacy Act

Brexit

Five Eyes

Europol

Interpol

5G
“5G: everything you need to know,” TechRadar, 16 January 2020

ISF Information Risk Assessment Methodology 2 (IRAM2)